

Taking Alaska hire ...

to a new degree

At ConocoPhillips, we know our industry's future depends on Alaskans today. And that funding education and training is key to energy jobs tomorrow. That's why we dedicate a major portion of our philanthropic budget to education, and we've invested millions in the University of Alaska. ConocoPhillips knows that UA graduates excel in their careers because we employ more than 100 of them, like UAF grad Kaiya Carlson, Aviation Business Service Manager.

We're working hard to build a strong economy, and that includes supporting local hire. In fact, almost 90 percent of our employees call Alaska home, which gives us among the highest Alaska hire rates in the industry. Yet another reason we're Alaska's Oil and Gas Company.
